Ninety-nine SUNY Cortland graduates, including this year's honorees, have received the award since 1968 for distinguishing themselves in their careers and for outstanding service to their community and their alma mater. In addition, 15 have been honored with Distinguished Young Alumni awards and six as Honorary Alumni.

Ingrida Karlsons Miemis '66

Ingrida Karlsons Miemis '66, a retired physical education teacher living in Westport, N.Y., established two children's summer camps in her native Latvia more than a decade ago.

Today, each camp serves nearly 300 campers and staff in the Baltic nation. More than 6,000 young campers from a cross section of Latvian society have benefited from the experience.

Latvia's Ministry of Education and the City of Ventspils, Latvia, honored Miemis for her efforts in 2001 with commendations. The American Latvian Association of Rockville, Md., Latvian Lutheran Church and Latvian Lutheran Church of New York have presented her with service awards.

Born in Riga, Latvia, Miemis lived in refugee camps in northern Germany from infancy until her family immigrated to the U.S. in 1950 when she was six. She was educated in the Bronx (N.Y.) High School of Science.

She earned a Bachelor of Science in Physical Education at SUNY Cortland and a Master of Science from Lehman College in Bronx, N.Y.

"(Emilio) "Dee" DaBramo '48 hired me in the Mamaroneck (N.Y.) Schools," she said. "Mamaroneck was an exciting, open and progressive place to teach. We were all encouraged to try new things and take new directions. I was fortunate to be able to teach at all academic levels in the same school district during my 36-year career.”

A longtime volunteer and fund-raiser for the Latvian Lutheran Church’s summer children’s camp, she decided to redirect part of her efforts.

“After visiting Latvia in 1990, I found my path: to help the children of this devastated country,” Miemis said. “One quarter of the children are orphaned, disabled or from residential schools and have no place to go for the summer months. What a joy to see an orphan make friends with kids he would have never met. The needy get to see parts of their country they have never seen before. It has been very rewarding to see my project grow. My hope is that I will be able to have a camp in every one of Latvia’s four provinces.”

She organized the first camp in 1992 from her own funds.

“I recruited a teacher in Latvia and any and all friends who would listen to what I had to say. We had 90 children and a skeleton staff. I brought Latvian American children from the U.S., as well as a few staff members, all volunteers paying their own way. It was a success.”

In subsequent years, Miemis was able to involve the Latvian American community in her cause and currently spends several months a year lining up sponsors for the needy and finding volunteers to help run the camps. Every summer at her own expense, she travels to camp and shares her knowledge of camping by organizing staff seminars and training sessions.

Her former classmates and colleagues noted her outstanding contributions during her career.

“In the 1970s, special education in most districts was a neglected area,” said Calvert Schlick, Jr., formerly assistant superintendent for instructional services for the Mamaroneck Schools. “In Mamaroneck it was a centerpiece and ‘Igg’ was in the center.”

A former colleague for more than 35 years, Kenneth Demas credits Miemis with helping launch a long list of programs through her commitment, leadership and active involvement. These included special education outdoor education overnights at Holiday Hill, the high school outdoor education curriculum, the middle school aquatics program, staff lifeguard and CPR training, the middle school outdoor education overnight experience, and the middle school human sexuality program.

At SUNY Cortland, Miemis was listed among Who’s Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities. She served as the Hilltop business manager, Appellate Court chair, a member of the Women’s Student Government Association, captain and treasurer of the Rockettes, a resident assistant in the Alpha Sigma sorority and a member of the Folk Dance Club and Women’s Athletic Association.

Miemis was given a lifetime membership to the Parent Teacher Association of New York State in 1984. She retired from the Mamaroneck District in 2001 as a physical and sex education teacher at Hommocks Middle School. Currently, in addition to directing and fund raising for the Latvian and Latvian American children’s camps, she serves on the Latvian Ladies Aid Society.

She and her husband, Juris, have three children, Inga, Kristaps and Karl.

Therese Sullivan Caccavale ’75

Therese Sullivan Caccavale ’75 of Hopedale, Mass., currently coordinates a highly innovative kindergarten through 12th grade language and French immersion program in the public schools of Holliston, Mass.

In 2002, the government of France honored her with a medal that makes her a Knight in the Order of Academic Palms, or Chevalier des Palmes Academiques, a distinguished order founded by Napoleon Bonaparte. Caccavale was recognized for her efforts to promote the French language and culture in the U.S.

She is primarily noted for her groundbreaking work as founder and director of the French immersion program, now 26 years old, where children are committed to take French language classes from kindergarten through the 12th grade. By the third grade, the students who enroll in the program are taking half their classes in French and half in English. Middle schoolers travel as a class to Canada and, in the eighth grade, to Paris, with full fluency as the ultimate goal.

“The high esteem in which Therese Caccavale is held by both political and academic figures alike is evident,” said Hazel Cramer, professor emerita of international communications and culture and a SUNY distinguished teaching professor. “She routinely meets and discusses educational policy, needs and practice with the Ambassadors of France representatives.”

For years Caccavale has taught a summer institute for Stephen Sadow, professor and acting chair of the Department of Modern Languages at Northeastern University in Boston.

“After many years, her program remains a showpiece,” Sadow said. “I continue to send my students to observe it. She has kept a class of teachers spellbound with anecdotes, techniques and videos of how to get foreign languages in the elementary school program started and how to keep them going. She is a figure of national stature, recognized in the U.S. and in Canada as an expert in language immersion for young children.”

Caccavale’s career was inspired in a class taught entirely in French by Catherine Porter Lewis, professor emerita of international communications and culture. Lewis was also honored by France with a Chevalier des Palmes Academiques. Caccavale also credits Cramer with steering her to observe a French immersion program at SUNY Plattsburgh before embarking on a teaching year at Lycée Victor Hugo, Besançon, France in Fall 1978 under a Fulbright Scholarship.

“I love to remember something once said by the great emperor, Charlemagne,” Caccavale said. “‘He who speaks two languages has two souls.’ My career has been a constant source of growth and fulfillment. I can only hope that the path I have chosen and the dreams I have fulfilled will someday inspire others to follow and develop their own ‘second soul.’”

Born in San Antonio, Texas, Caccavale graduated from Elmira Free Academy in Elmira, N.Y., having already fallen in love with French language and culture as a junior during a summer in Tours, France. She earned a dual degree in elementary education and French at SUNY Cortland, during which time she took part in the Junior Year Abroad Program in Neuchâtel, Switzerland. Caccavale received a Master of Arts in French from Middlebury College in Vermont. She also has a Diplome d’Etudes Approfondies from the Université de Besançon, France.

In 2006, Caccavale will assume the presidency of the National Network for Early Language Learning, the leading national organization for foreign language instruction in early grades in the U.S. She also served on the board of the Massachusetts Foreign Language Association. As an adjunct professor at Boston University in Spring 2004, she worked with young teachers to develop their professional licensure portfolio. She is pursuing a doctorate in language, literacy and cultural studies at Boston University.

Caccavale visited campus last December to deliver the keynote address at the 14th Annual Teachers in Training Foreign Language Conference. For her contributions to teaching the language and cross-cultural understanding, she was inducted as an honorary member into SUNY Cortland's chapter of the national French honorary society, Pi Delta Phi, in April. The chapter of this almost 100-year-old honor society was formed at SUNY Cortland two years after she had graduated.

She and her husband, Frank, have three sons, Samuel, Brian and Peter.

Richard Pollack '77

Richard Pollack '77 of Arlington, Va., has served since 1991 as the executive vice president of the American Hospital Association (AHA). He represents nearly 5,000 community-based organizations that employ more than four million people and provide essential 24-hour health care services year-round.

As the chief lobbyist for the organization since 1991, he is responsible for managing the association's activities in the areas of legislation, regulatory affairs, executive branch relations, legal advocacy, media relations, public policy analysis, development, grassroots advocacy networks and political action committee.

"It is both a significant responsibility and unique platform from which to make a positive contribution toward the improvement of health care in this nation," Pollack said.

His initiatives on behalf of the AHA have included extending coverage to the uninsured, improving quality of care and enhancing patient safety, ensuring that hospitals are better prepared for emergencies particularly in the aftermath of Sept. 11, and working to ensure that the federal government makes the necessary resources available to care for the country's most vulnerable citizens served through Medicare and Medicaid.

In Spring 2005, The Hill, a newspaper serving Capitol Hill, included Pollack on its list of 25 Top Rainmakers in Washington, D.C., in particular for his work on behalf of the hospital lobby to secure payment hikes for rural hospitals as part of the most recent Medicare legislation.

Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., Pollack was educated in Sheepshead Bay High School. Pollack received a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science from SUNY Cortland and a Master of Public Administration from American University.

"Cortland gave me a solid foundation for my future by reinforcing fundamental values, providing lifelong friends and preparing me for a career where I was fortunate enough to make my interests and hobbies my work," Pollack said. "While a formal liberal arts education contributed to that foundation, it was the political science internships in county government, along with a series of extra-curricular activities, that provided the practical experience to be successful in government and politics at the federal level."

As an undergraduate, Pollack made a critical political connection when he was selected as one of SUNY Cortland's representatives to participate in the SUNY Washington Semester Program.

"After interning for Congressman David Obey of Wisconsin through the program, I was hired as one of his legislative assistants. My entry into the health care field began when I became a legislative assistant, or lobbyist, for the American Nurses Association. In 1982, I joined the advocacy team of the American Hospital Association, where I served first as a staff lobbyist and then as vice president and deputy director of its Washington Office."

He is married to Diane Pollack. They have two children, Megan and Daniel.
