Keynote Speaker

Robert S. Darling

A member of the College's Geology Department since 1992, Robert S. Darling has developed a reputation for bringing course materials to life through drawings, physical models and easy-to-understand explanations. SUNY honored his outstanding classroom performance in 1999 with a Chancellor's Award for Excellence in Teaching and promoted him to the rank of Distinguished Teaching Professor in 2013.

Darling has a bachelor of science from SUNY Oneonta, a master of science from Idaho State University and a doctorate from Syracuse University.

He has remained active as a scholar and researcher throughout his career, writing more than 14 published journal articles, 10 geological guidebooks, two maps and a book review. He has conducted research under numerous grants, including the National Science Foundation. Since 2002, he has served as a research associate in mineralogy to the New York State Museum. From 2007 to 2008, Darling presided over the New York State Geological Association.

Considered to be among the top world experts on the geology of the Adirondacks, Darling also excels at mentoring undergraduate students in research and former students beyond their graduations.

On campus, he is the new director of faculty development. He has chaired his department two times and currently leads the subcommittee for the Brauer Memorial Field Station at William H. Parks Family Center for Environmental and Outdoor Education. He also advises the Geology Club.
